Course profile

Convinced of the necessity for a high level of communicative competence in foreign languages in the professional world today, UCAM's Language Department has designed a truly innovative degree in modern languages, which places strong emphasis on international work placements during the four year degree course.

During the course, students will obtain a high level of communicative competence in two foreign languages (English-German or English-French), as well as foster an in-depth knowledge base of the respective cultures and their socio-economic and historical backgrounds. Another priority of the degree is the development of strong ethical values, thus further ensuring optimal opportunities in the labor market. The Bachelor's in Modern Languages offers two different itineraries i.e. language and international communication, and foreign language teaching and learning.

UCAM also has a firm commitment to the internationalization of its students' professional profiles by means of exchange programs with prestigious partner universities in a multitude of countries around the globe.

Access requirements

Students interested in enrolling in UCAM's Bachelor's in Modern Languages should have a B1 level (or higher) of the English language. Previous knowledge of German and French is not required, although welcome.
