Francisco de Borja Montes Toscano is a specialist with over seven years of professional and research experience at the Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe (SHAPE), NATO.

His responsibilities have revolved around the management of international treaties and agreements with foreign public entities, as well as academic institutions with which he has fostered exchange agreements and joint research projects.

The research he has conducted has primarily focused on international objective liability and how it can be reflected in diverse scenarios such as climate change, privileges and immunities of international organizations, food security, artificial intelligence, and the use of outer space.
